The constantly increasing facilities for travel, and the commercial and social relations existing throughout the United States and Canadas, has created a demand for a rallway guide, which will not only enable the traveller to perceive at a glance the time of departure of the trains from their various stations, their connections upon the route of travel, distances, termini, &c., but one which will make him familiar with the different portions of the country through which be passes.

Journeys, which some twenty years ago were measured by days, are now accomplished in as many hours. Commercial operations which formerly required months to complete, are now accomplished in as many days.

Change has demanded change. The guide books which years, months since, were considered indispensable, are now thrown aside as worthless, the progress of the age demanding something more comprehensive and of greater practical utility.

The compiler would remark in presenting this work to the thrown aside as worthless, the progress of the age demanding something more comprehensive and of greater practical utility.

The compiler would remark, in presenting this work to the public, that he has devoted much time, and travelled many thousand miles in order to perfect it. The most important feature of this guide is, its convenience as a book of reference; each principal road being fully and correctly delineated by a separate map (engraved expressly for the road), representing the distances, stations, connections, and chorography.

It has been the aim, not only to combine completeness of information with the greatest possible facility of reference, so far as railways and steamboats are concerned, but also to direct travellers what hotel they may stop at upon their arrival in a city or village. Travellers who make use of this work, and find any inaccuracies therein, are particularly requested to communicate personally or by letter with the publishers, who will be pleased to receive any suggestions which they may consider beneficial to the travelling community.—[Extract from Perface.]

The most valuable work on the subject ever presented to the profession.

[From the British and Foreign Medico-Chirurgical Review, London.]

The work is worthy of its author, a credit to his country and a rich mine of instruction to the profession at large.

[From the Charleston Medical Journal and Review.]

We have read every page of this admirable book, and pronounce it the most valuable contribution ever offered to the profession. It has received the highest cacomitums from the press of this country and England.

This work is destined to make a high mark; it discusses with the ability of a master the various diseases of women and children; and its style is so intelligible and eloquent, that the non-professional reader can readily comprehend the author's principles of health.

[From the New York Courier and Enquirer.]

The intense spirit and frolic of the author's sketches have made him one of the most successful writers of the day.—Literary Gazetic.

The author is pre-eminent for his mirth moving powers, for his acute sense of the ridiculous, for the breadth of his humor, and for his power of dramatic writing, which renders his boldest conceptions with the happiest facility. It is seldom, indeed, that we have met in any volume with such frequent occasions for a hearty and prolonged laugh, and in which the raciness of the fun more often amounis to wit.—Athenseum.

We hardly know how to convey an adequate notion of the exuberant whim and drollery by which this writer is characterized. His works are a perpetual feast of galety. Adventure successes to adventure, seen to seene, character to character, and in all so much variety, so much genuine humor, that every taste must find something wherewish to be pleased.
